Teachers, Students, and Parents to Directly Propose Ideas for Developing AI Digital Textbooks

-Ministry to hold a workshop on AI digital textbook design with direct participation of teachers, students, and parents.

-Ideas derived from the workshops will be reflected on the development guidelines to be announced in August.

On July 8, the Ministry of Education (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Education Lee Ju-Ho) will hold an AI Digital Textbook Design Workshop at HIGHGROUND Seongsu Branch in Seoul.

The AI Digital Textbook Design Workshop will be organized to hear directly from teachers, students, and parents about the features they want in order to develop AI digital textbooks that can be easily and conveniently used by all users, with the goal of realizing "personalized education for all".

A total of 100 people, including teachers, students, and parents selected through a pre-survey* and teachers who won the AI digital textbook idea contest held in April (organized by Korea Education and Research Information Service), are invited to participate in the workshop to gather ideas for new AI digital textbooks based on their experiences on the ground.

The ideas will be reviewed by experts and reflected on the AI digital textbook development guidelines to be released in August, and will be shared with textbook developers through the Textbook Discussion Forum to ensure that feedback from the ground is fully reflected in the development process.

"As the AI digital textbook is a policy promoted to realize personalized education for all, we will fully reflect the opinions of teachers, students, and parents who will be the ones that actually use it," said Kim Yeon-seok, Director General of the Responsible Public Education Policy Bureau at the Ministry of Education. "We hope that each attendee will present forthright ideas with the mindset that they are representatives of their respective fields."
